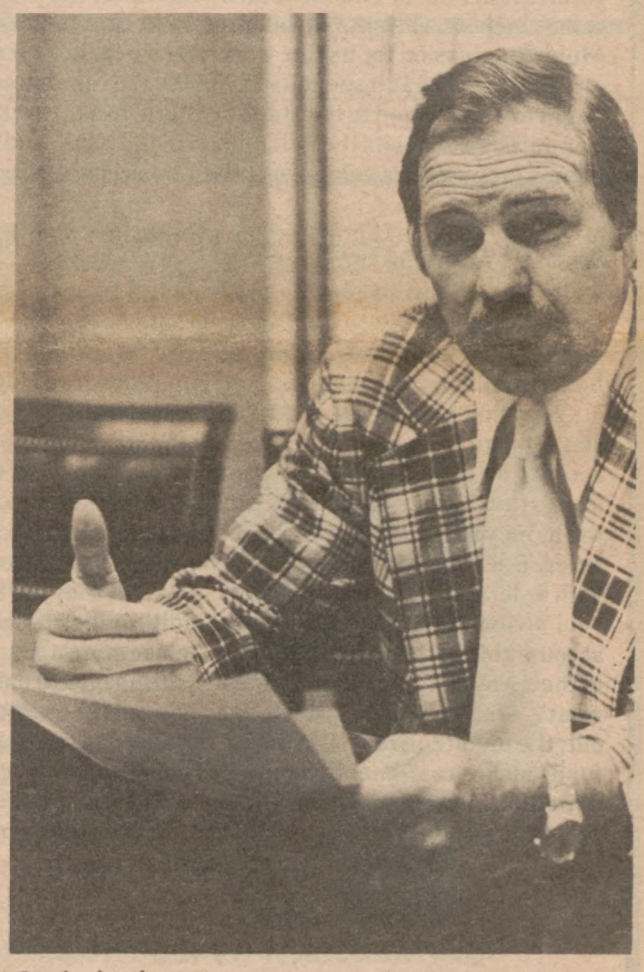
Four races to watch June 8

Nineteen seventy-six seems destined to be one of the dullest election years for South Carolinians in quite a while. Only in one Congressional District--the Sixth--is there any semblance so far of a competitive statewide race. The excitement and anxieties that were thrown into the 1974 elections by the reapportionment of the House into single-member districts have subsided. Despite anticipation that the Senate might be faced with a similar situation this year, hopes that some new blood might be injected into the tired old body politic of South Carolina were dashed when Senate reapportionment never came off.

Because state senators are still going to be elected from multi-member districts, and since many county councilpersons and officials will continue to be elected at large, voters around the state have massive numbers of candidates to consider. Issues have given way to personalities, which are much easier to focus on. And luckily South Carolina has its share of political personalities--people whose races are worth watching, if only for pure entertainment value. Mudslinging, fisticuffs, name-calling: the ingredients of an interesting political year are all there. Osceola has focused on four state Senate races to keep an eye on, either because they have the potential of substantially changing the political structure of the state, or just because they're interesting.

Hemphill Pride

Heyward McDonald



Crosby Lewis

John V. Green

The horserace for Medlock's seat

Columbia attorney Travis Medlock initiated one of the state's hottest and most unpredictable Senate races when he decided a couple months ago not to offer for re-election to the seat he has held for the past four years. Medlock, whose voting record during his one Senate term has been consistently (if quietly) liberal, wearied of fighting his conservative colleagues all the time and decided to give up the cause. His announcement not to run again set off a flurry of politicking. Five Democrats are set to square off June 8 for their party's nomination for the seat, and there is one Republican (Robert E. Davis) waiting in the wings to see who he'll have to face in the general election.

It looks certain, though, that the contest isn't going to be narrowed down to two candidates June 8. The race is so evenly balanced that a runoff vote is almost assured. The Democratic candidates are Heyward McDonald, E. Crosby Lewis, and Hemphill Pride II, all lawyers, and two businessmen, John V. Green and William S. Holler. Not only would it be difficult to predict who will be the eventual nominee -- it's almost equally hard to forecast which two men will make it to the imminent runoff election.

Lewis and McDonald have already had a good deal of statewide exposure, but that won't necessarily guarantee them many votes because most of their exposure has not been in the recent past. Crosby Lewis is a 42-year-old Fairfield County attorney who was state Democratic Party chairman from 1968 to 1970 and was vice chairman of the State Board of Education for two years. A member of the state House of Representatives from 1960 to 1965, the former USC football player and law school graduate ran unsuccessfully for a state Senate seat in 1972. But in the past four years, Lewis has been pretty much out of the public eye.

McDonald, like Lewis, could become a political has-been if he loses this Senate race. Similarly, he got a lot of exposure a few years back but has had little since then. He was a state representative from 1962 to 1966. In 1970 he ran for Congress against Republican Floyd Spence and came within a proverbial eyelash of beating him, losing by a few thousand votes. The McDonald-Spence race was an exceptionally interesting one. At one point a fake newspaper was

THE Political economy
BY ED MEADOWS

The dual-funding scam

In the regime of Gov. James Edwards (and the conservative Democrats before him), high-toned phrases like "fiscal integrity" and "sound management" have dominated Statehouse political perorations. Yet the state's own Legislative Audit Council has lately found dramatic instances of fiscal shenanigans in state government. The Council has discovered that state agencies are ripping off millions of dollars from the federal government, and ultimately, from you the taxpayer.

We can call it the "dual-funding" scam, and it works this way: A state government agency administers a federal program. To do this, it receives an appropriation from the state legislature, an appropriation to cover salaries, administrative costs, etc. But in addition, the state agency is later reimbursed by the federal government for those same expenses. The state agency, in effect, pockets this money. It squirrels the federal money away in its own bank account, to do with whatever the agency pleases. For all you or I know, that money might be buying a new sports car for the agency chief. It could be paying for phony "junkets" to Paris and Rome. No one knows.

To illustrate the scam clearly, we can conjure up a mythical state agency, call it the S.C. Mule Commission. Now the distinguished Mule Commission, headed by a former partner in Gov. Edwards' dental practice, is to administer a federal program to give mules birth control pills. The Mule Commission asks for, and receives, a total of $500,000 in state appropriations to run the birth control pill program. (And if you opine that perhaps $500,000 is a bit much to pay for the feeding of pills to a bunch of mules, remember that, after all, it's only taxpayers' money.) Anyway, the S.C. Mule Commission duly spends its appropriation of $500,000, and duly doles out the birth control pills to recalcitrant mules. Then several months after the program has expired, a check comes in the mail from Washington. It's a check for $500,000, to reimburse the Mule Commission for its fine work. But since the revered Commission has already received and spent its $500,000, the reimbursement is a surplus. It ought to be returned to the state's general fund. In reality, the Mule Commission deposits the half million in the bank, and writes checks on the money for purposes unknown to the general public, or even the state legislature.

The Legislative Audit Council's report on "dual-funding," dated April 15 of this year, says from $20 to $40 million of federal money has been "diverted" to state agency bank balances and there is no way to account for the cash. In fact, the report says, "these funds now lie outside the direct monitoring of any independent authority." Some agencies, according to the Council report, have built up millions of dollars in secret, unauthorized slush funds.

Now this scheme is unlawful in several ways. Most obviously, it violates the state constitution by interfering with the state legislature's ability to fully account for the allocation and use of public money. In theory at least, the legislature has the obligation to let the public know exactly what it is doing with the money it has directly or indirectly appropriated from our pocketbooks via taxes. But the job is impossible if state agencies are feathering their own nests with federal money. In plain language, what they are doing is stealing.

Furthermore, the possession of multi-million dollar bank balances not accountable to the public is bound to make state agency bureaucrats inefficient in their ways. If an agency knows it's sitting on $10 million in "surplus" funds, what's a few thousand thrown away here and there? And as the Council points out, the unauthorized "flexibility" afforded to state agencies with secret slush funds makes cost-benefit analysis of government programs impossible by definition. One cannot measure the cost efficiency of a program if that program's budget may or may not be supplemented by improperly-received

"One for the suckers, one hundred for me."

Fun 'n' games

Democrats are more fun. Even Republicans are wont to admit as much. Take, for example, the Democratic stump meeting held June 1st at Emily Douglas Park in Shandon. There were no speeches, none at all. Instead one threw pies at one's favorite candidate. The gentlemen (and ladies) whose profession it is to produce whole atmospheres of hot roaring rhetorical flatulence -- these people got their comeuppance in the face. It was the climax of the evening.

The stump meeting, sponsored by the Richland County Democratic Party, was more successful than anyone had a right to expect. For in the afternoon of the rally, rain drenched Columbia and the organizers (Richard Jay Coyle was their field marshal) had all but cancelled the meet indefinitely. The rain forced the meeting to forego offering donkey rides on a Democratic donkey from Greenwood, and it soaked the hot dog tables and the flatbed that was supposed to be the bandstand for Mama Tried, the local all-female folk-rock band.

But the meeting happened anyway, almost spontaneously. Around about 5:30 p.m. the sun broke through the clouds and people began to trickle into the park. Any plans that organizers had to cancel out were sent to oblivion as the place began to get crowded.

That was a good thing, too. The sun dried out everything, including the soggy feelings of the organizers, and soon 300 people were there, and 50 candidates showed up. Mama Tried finally got set up and began playing some gentle country rock, and in the end, connoisseurs claimed it was the best stump meeting of the year. It was, in reality, more of a Democratic Party party than a stump meeting. Candidates went their rounds shaking hands, and girls handed out cards and leaflets, and children begged their mothers for quarters to spend on chances to dunk a clown in a tank of water.

Not only that, but the sale of hot dogs and soft drinks, not to mention the sketching of portraits for a price, and an auction of items including a book signed by Jimmy Carter, all grossed more that $1,000, for a net profit to the Democratic Clubs of $750. Not so bad for an evening that almost didn't happen.

Advice to Jerry

Down the straight track depart President and Mrs. Ford, standing alone now on the platform of the receding train, waving back...

"Did you get shook, did you get shook?" shrieks the trombonist of the Northeastern High School Band. "No," squeals the clarinetist of the rival Central High School band hysterically, "but I touched him! I touched him!"

All their lives they will remember it; it was like this for 50 years. Mr. Ford revived the Campaign Special one day in Michigan last month and took the supposedly "doubtful state" two-to-one. If he wants to take California (winner-take-all, 167 GOP delegates June 8 and the nomination may hang on it), he will whistle-stop right down the state, Sacramento to Los Angeles, doing what he does best, mingling with people and gladhanding all the way.

You need a band. It tells patriotic things to crowds nothing else can, about presidents and people, and fun, and excitement, and America the beautiful and to hell with issues. There are four bands here for Ford, and the wonderful march from "Music Man," "Seventy-six Trombones;" and then there is big, honest, mediocre Jerry Ford in the flesh waving; it stirs the blood, shakes off the miasma of this dreadful election; now we are back in an older tradition, "Tippicanoe and Tyler, too," surely there is nothing wrong with a little festival folksiness.

Mr. Ford is talking and I knew what would happen though I had forgotten it - that decrepit old brewery building with broken windows across the railroad yard is talking back at him; of course it would, it always has, echoing and carrying on dialogues with candidates. That building or its twin moved all the way across the states at 20 stops a day when Harry Truman made his 1948 campaign.

"Did you actually sleep on the train? I mean - sleep on it?" a young reporter asks me.

Ha! It was 16 cars including sleeping and dining coaches, with 80 or 100 newsmen aboard and at the end the "Ferdinand Magellan" with oversized rear platform and striped canopy and loudspeakers on top. We started on Thursday, June 3, 1948, says the schedule which I have preserved, with a 1:32 a.m. service stop at Harrisburg ("Change crews, ice, water, inspection") and first speech at Crestline, Ohio at 10:53, and so on to Chicago ("Drive to Palmer House and Stadium"). He steamed across Iowa and Nebraska and places like that meeting great locomotives in lonely places coming the other way to Sunday services at Kearney where we sat in gothic pine pews, under the Roll of Honor, temperature 80 degrees with sunlight streaming through stain glass windows, and the minister said, "If God is on our side nothing else matters." I know because I scribbled soft notes in pencil - "elevation 2149," "red axminster carpet," and "First Baptist church." I used the text of Mr. Truman's earlier "rear platform remarks at Grand Island, Nebraska" (June 6, 1948) for notes, where he received a peace pipe, a parcel of local beet sugar, and his third pair of spurs. He observed, "These spurs are wonderful. When I get them on I can take the Congress to town. Give them a trial, just as soon as I get back to Washington."

Sparkling, eh? It is remarks like that that Jerry Ford is good at too, and introducing his wife. With Harry he would say, "And now I want you to meet the Boss." Plumb and matronly she would appear and he would proudly introduce her, and then say, "And here's the one who bosses her," and radiant Margaret would step out, probably with an armful of roses, and there would be yells and wolf whistles, and who could vote against a family like that?

Truman told them at Grand Island he would like to make a political speech but couldn't. Sunday, you know. Never on Sunday. The trip took us over the Missoula, Montana, pass, where we took on "the helper engine," and dropped it off again at Pass Evaro, Montana.

Saturday, June 12, we were rolling down California - speaking, speaking all the way, 18 hours. Jerry Ford, take note.

Yes, it was fun... The train slows and telephone poles march slower. People gawking. There is a distant rhythmic throbbing, the band, "Hail to the Chief!"

Correspondents move from club car to platform and with easy familiarity swing back the iron doors and release the floor catch which brings up the iron plate above the steps. Jump off at the band; where the band is the crowd is -- and that's where the engineer will halt the rear platform.

The crowd stretches back a block and a half. Truman starts talking; which one will it be this time -- about Grandfather Young and the covered wagon? No, this time after a brief plug for a federal health insurance program (Imagine! -- 28 years ago Truman was urging it and still we alone of modern nations don't have it) he is telling unaffectedly of his great romance with The Boss: "She was five and I was six. I sat in front of her, and now and then she used to tap me over the head with a ruler."

(At Los Angeles, when he left the train, a million people saw him; pity he was going to lose; all the polls showed Dewey way ahead.)

The reporter at a whistle stop jumped off the moving steps, raced the slowing train down the roped platform to the crowd around the band, had his yellow Western Union page against the dusty side of the "Ferdinand Magellan" at the first yell of the throng when the President appeared and was ready for the climax with the President spacing his words and chip-chopping with his hands, for emphasis, "I am talking about the party that gave us that no-account do-nothing Republican Eightieth Congress..."

"Give 'em hell, Harry!" somebody shouts. The whistle toots four times. "Western, Western, Western!" yells the reporter tossing the hasty copy to a messenger boy like throwing a fish to a gull. Away we go. It'll be a wonder if Truman stops at the Mexico line...

So there's my advice, Jerry. It's your secret weapon. I watched you and Betty on the special train that day in Michigan. You're good at it. A big smile. A big wave. A quick descent from the car, working the crowd. Then roll away like a movie fade-out, down the shining tracks, you and Betty alone on the platform, exeunt waving. You want to win this election? You know how.

California nuclear vote: an interesting proposition

by Andrew Poliakoff

Since South Carolina is considered by some as "home" for the nuclear power industry -- what with the currently operating facilities, the proposed ones, and the Barnwell storage plant under construction -- more than a few state citizens are looking with great interest to the Proposition 15 referendum in California's primary on June 8.

At issue in Proposition 15 -- formally known as the Nuclear Safeguard Initiative -- are several controversial proposals that are being vigorously opposed by the men who run the nuclear industry.

The proposal focuses on the ever-increasing question of safety of the plants and contains the following provisions:

-- Removal of the $560 million federal limit on liability for nuclear accidents, set years ago by the Price-Anderson Act.

--Future construction of nuclear power plants would have to be approved by two-thirds vote of the California legislature. Before giving approval, the legislature would have to be convinced by an advisory commission of experts that a proposed nuclear plant was safe in design and that adequate arrangements existed for disposal of radioactive fuel wastes.

-- A requirement that the governor publish evacuation plans for each nuclear plant and review those plans annually.

As could be expected, the battle has shaped up as an expensive contest between the giant corporations who have millions invested in the nuclear power field and the grass roots support of environmental and anti-nuclear groups. The corporations have spent heavily -- probably as much as $3 million -- for a massive television, radio and newspaper campaign to defeat Proposition 15.

Those working for passage of the initiative -- including Ralph Nader -- have raised about half a million dollars to combat the corporations, most of the money coming from citizen contributions.

Not all of the corporation money has been donated by predominantly California concerns. Locally, Duke Power and Carolina Power and Light have coughed up at least $9,000 and $6,000, respectively, to the "No On 15 Committee." In addition to these cash contributions from company funds, Duke has written its 15,000 shareholders in California in order to "educate" the public about nuclear power. Shareholders have been asked to vote against the proposition, of course.

The concern of companies like Duke and CP&L is that as more people become educated to the realities of nuclear power -- not only safety, but costs, efficiency and other factors -- they worry whether it is worth all the risks in the long run to use it at all. And, Pro-15 workers suggest, when the industry rebels at even modest attempts at regulation, such as in this case, one has to wonder about the industry's confidence in its ability to prove the safety of the plants.

"Duke and Carolina Power & Light have coughed up at least $9,000 and $6,000 respectively to fight Proposition 15."

The industry is attempting to nip in the bud the widespread questioning of the nuclear power that has surfaced in California. The last thing the industry needs is for such criticism and irreverence to spread to places like the Carolinas, where the nuclear advocates have run with a relatively free reign for years.

California is one of 22 states which guarantees to its citizens the right of initiative; that is, the right of the people to establish a law through direct ballot. An estimated ten other states are contemplating referendums already. But it is doubtful that the amount of opposition that has been orchestrated in California -- a half million signatures were needed to get the Proposition 15 on the ballot -- can be duplicated in other states. Therefore, many regard this as a final attempt to seriously impose regulations on the nuclear industry.

To divert attention from the central issues of safety, insurance and public participation, the industry has concentrated on emotional items such as what it describes as "massive unemployment, poorer living standard, runaway costs, and foreign dominance." The public relations firm of Winner and Wagner and the Eumpert Advertising Agency have been enlisted by the industry to sway the public its way.

But nuclear foes argue that the issues raised by the corporations and their expensive ad agencies are not only the wrong ones, but inaccurately portrayed as well. It is generally conceded now that in the long run, more construction and operational jobs will be gained by using power plants other than nuclear ones. And the cost of building nuclear plants and the skyrocketing cost of uranium, its short supply, and the future necessity of importing much of it from foreign countries further contradicts the corporate wisdom.

If Proposition 15 fails June 8 in California, the way might be paved for renewed and untrammelled development of nuclear power in California and the rest of the nation. So far the nuclear industry has been

Vote Campbell in District 72 on June 8

As a freshman Representative from District 72, Bill Campbell has provided progressive leadership on critical issues: ethics, freedom of information, tax reform, and education. For his work on tidelands protection, the Congaree Swamp and the "bottle bill," the South Carolina Wildlife Federation named him 1976 Legislator of the Year.

Bill Campbell was among the first state legislators to develop a constituent newsletter. He has worked actively with the Wheeler Hill Community Association, the Eau Claire Community project, the Shandon Neighborhood Council, and other groups to help solve neighborhood problems inside and outside District 72.

Bill Campbell is running for re-election this year. The first step is the Democratic primary on June 8.

If you live in House District 72, Bill Campbell is your Representative. On June 8, go out and vote to keep him.

successful in giving the American public an inferiority complex regarding its ability to deal with scientific and technological issues. On the other hand, if the proposition passes, and the nuclear industry reveals its inability to successfully conduct appropriate tests and demonstrate to elected officials their safety claims, other states may take notice. In South Carolina, it might provide a morale boost for the small citizens' groups that have persisted in opposition to the Dukes and CP&Ls, despite inadequate resources.

In the U.S., as in most nations with nuclear technologies, nuclear energy decisions have been made without significant consultation with the public. But past scenarios such as Watergate have encouraged citizens to challenge traditional closed-door decisions-makers. A "Critical Mass" conference sponsored by Nader in 1974 revealed that citizens from all over the country were extremely concerned about nuclear power, and in fact were more numerous and better organized than the nuclear industry had anticipated.

A spokesman for Duke was quoted as saying about his company's contributions: "We did it because we have such a tremendous stake in nuclear power and we think it is a protection ... to our customers and shareholder." (boldface added)

While there are those who may see protection in short-term financial gains, there are also quite a few of who believe that it is going to take more than a fat dividend check to prevent a nuclear accident from killing thousands of people.

Proposition 15 could be the beginning of something big.

JIM BARBER FOR COUNTY COUNCIL.

Under the newly inplemented Home Rule Act the County Council has greater authority for the operation of County government than it has ever had. This increased responsibility, coupled with the increasing demands of suburban residents that the County become a provider of city-type services, such as police and fire protection, makes County Council one of the most important governmental bodies in your day-to-day life.

Jim Barber is a candidate for the Richland County Council because he believes that the first Council to assume the increased responsibilities of home rule will shape County government for years to come. The new County Council will serve you best if it is energetic, vigorous and representative of the many viewpoints in our County.

Vote Jim Barber on June 8

Isn't it time Richland County had a Sheriff?

Since 1970 the number of housebreakings in Richland County have increased from 1400 to over 3000 last year. In the same period of time the Richland County Sheriff Department's budget went from $800,000 to $1.8 million.

In other words, the last four years of Sheriff Frank Powell have brought the citizens of Richland County twice as much crime for twice as much money.

Rhett Jacobs believes that throwing money at crime won't make it go away; the statistics prove that beyond any doubt. What will have an impact on crime is an efficient Sheriff's Department in which the officers are ordered to give a fast and courteous response to each and every complaint reported by citizens.

Rhett Jacobs is an experienced businessman who believes that the same sound business principles which have worked well in his private business enterprises will, when applied to law enforcement, cause a decrease in the incidence of crime in our county. Rhett Jacobs wants to bring citizen participation into the Sheriff's Department through the creation of neighborhood watch groups which will assist the Sheriff in an effort to stop housebreakers.

Rhett Jacobs also wants to create a rape counseling group which will be composed of rape victims and members of their families who volunteer to assist other rape victims in coping with the mental and emotional anguish which rape almost always produces.

But the cornerstone of everything which Rhett Jacobs proposes is efficient, courteous response to the needs of Richland County's citizens. It's time that the citizens of this county have more than a television news story for a Sheriff. It's time that the citizens have a Sheriff who speaks and meets with them more often than every four years at election time. It's time Richland County had a Sheriff.

published, called "Black Power Advocate," which claimed that McDonald was being supported secretly by some black leaders but wouldn't admit it for fear of losing his white support. Who was responsible for the bogus paper was never established, but Spence denied having anything to do with it.

The McDonald-Spence Congressional bout developed into a horserace to see which candidate could out-rightwing the other. The Vietnam War, of course, was THE issue, and Spence -- being a Republican whose base of support lay in conservative Lexington County -- predictably followed the Nixon administration line. But McDonald, a Naval Academy graduate who was crippled in both legs by polio in 1953 and walks with the aid of crutches, didn't back down a mite. McDonald, first cousin of The State columnist Bill McDonald, backed Nixon fully on his conduct of the war, including the Cambodian invasion. "He...has the facts, and conscientiously believes that the move (into Cambodia) will shorten the war and save lives. We should support him," he said during the campaign. And he also came out strongly against busing and for control of campus disorders.

Possibly the most intriguing factor in the current Senate race is how well the lone black candidate, attorney Hemphill P. Pride II, can harness the black vote. He has little chance of garnering a substantial white vote, because outside of Columbia and lower Richland County, the district is heavily white. And Pride, rather that avoiding race as an issue, has been promoting himself as South Carolina's best chance to have its first black senator. He didn't even bother to show up at a June 1 public fund-raising festival in the heavily white Shandon area of Columbia -- perhaps an indication that he's given up on getting the white vote. But if Pride can't win the race himself, he can certainly have some influence on who does win it.

Pride has run the most negative campaign of all the candidates. he held a press conference in mid-May to accuse one or more of his opponents of buying votes, but he declined to say who he or they were or to give any further information. State Democratic chairman Don Fowler replied to a letter from Pride alleging the vote-buying by asking for more specifics before he could investigate. And State Elections Commission executive director James B. Ellisor responded to another Pride letter by explaining that the commission has no investigative authority, and the allegations would have to be checked out either by the circuit solicitor (in this case James Anders, a frequent opponent of Pride in and out of court), the county grand jury, the state Attorney General, the Governor, or the FBI if a federal violation was involved. Pride has still come forward with no proof of his charges, though he has been challenged by his opponents to file affidavits providing specific evidence. The 39-year-old lawyer has maintained that he will do so before the election, but adds that he is still checking with the FBI and the Justice Department about the proper way to do it.

John V. Green, a Columbia realtor, is probably the least controversial of the candidates. Green, 45, was a Richland County councilman from 1968 to 1972, and council chairman during the last two years of that sometimes controversial term. He was defeated when he ran for council again in 1974. One of seven candidates vying for two vacant council seats, he finished first in the first ballot of the Democratic primary, but in a four-person runoff a few weeks later, he came in last. His four-year stint on the council has been his only elective office. Green enlivened his lackluster campaign somewhat when, a week before the election, he held a press conference criticizing loopholes in the state ethics law and presenting his own financial statement. He listed $2,775 in contributions as of June 1, the bulk of the contributions being $100 or under besides his own $720 chipped in. He also listed his expenditures, and challenged his opponents to make similar financial disclosures, but none had done so as of June 2.

The man with the steepest uphill climb ahead of him is William S. Holler, the young owner of a construction and real estate business in Columbia. Holler is anywhere from 27 to 30 years old, depending on which press account one reads. He likes to deemphasize his youth -- which may be understandable since the youngest Senator now is 32 and the average age is probably in the upper fifties. Holler was the only one of three dozen or so Columbia area candidates filling out a League of Women Voters questionnaire who wouldn't provide his age.

Holler ran for Congress from the Fifth District in 1974, and came in last in a seven-man race which Ken Holland won. Of his campaign style, The State's Steve Bailey wrote in July 1974: "Holler...has campaigned door-to-door with his blond wife, Bernie, meeting over 26,000 people, he says, but at the same time his aggressive manner has alienated a number of candidates and much of the media." The candidate's reply: "If you're mild mannered, you're not going to get anything accomplished." His aggressiveness was rewarded with four percent of the vote in the Democratic primary.

It seems as if Holler might have altered his tune and his tactics after the ignominious 1974 defeat, but he hasn't. Richland County Representative Bill Campbell recently had a party at his home to kick off his re-election campaign. It was, for the most part, a very low-key affair, and Campbell's friends who happened to be running for office avoided obvious politicking. Except for Holler, who apparently hadn't gotten the word. He virtually set up a temporary campaign office in the Campbell home -- shoving cards at anyone within reaching distance, pumping stray hands, pleading for votes. Campbell later called the display "obnoxious."

On the whole, however, the campaign for Medlock's Senate seat -- with the exception of Holler's aggressiveness and Pride's mudslinging -- has been a quiet, unexceptional affair. One reason for that is that there is a limited range of issues that the voters seem really concerned about in 1976, and the range of solutions is also limited.

Stevens

Stevens' old-timey politics

Leave it to Senator James P. Stevens to inject a healthy dose of old-timey politics into an otherwise staid election year. Stevens was recently engaged in a debate of sorts with several candidates trying to bump him out of the Senate seat which he's held for the past twenty years. The debate took place May 29, at Bayboro, located in the middle of Horry county, which Stevens represents along with Florence, Marion and Williamsburg Counties.

Stevens had organized the debate himself, challenging his four Democratic opponents to try to out-talk him. Three of them showed up, along with a crowd of about 1,000 persons. But one of the candidates, 33-year-old John Lavern Reaves, the Loris city attorney, said something which the 56-year-old Stevens didn't like. "Senator," he said, "I say you are a pathological liar and I would like you to comment on that." Stevens, not much for words, chose to "comment" by grabbing Reaves from behind and wrestling him to the ground. Reportedly, no blows were struck and the impromptu wrestling match was quickly broken up.

Stevens apologized to Reaves and crowd as soon as he had cooled down a bit, but said, "I believe no man is worth his salt who sits here and doesn't do anything about this." Reaves wasn't satisfied, though -- the next day he had a warrant sworn out against Stevens, charging the Senator with assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature. Stevens was forced to post a $1,000 bond in a magistrate's court June 1. Reaves contended that he had not resisted Stevens, and that he had suffered bruises to the neck in the abbreviated bout.

Stevens, responding with his characteristic fieriness, not to mention paranoia, claimed that the whole incident had been planned and staged by his four Democratic opponents. Reaves and the other two men who had been there -- G. Stanley Bryant and A.C. Horne -- denied it, as did Stevens' most formidable opponent, Little River postmaster Ralph Ellis, later.

It's not the first time that Stevens has over-reacted to criticism, though. Two years ago, when Osceola reported that Stevens was a stockholder and director of a corporation that was connected with apparently illegal dredging operations on Sandy Island in Georgetown County, the Senator took Osceola and some of his fellow senators to task on the Senate floor. And he labeled environmentalists who were criticizing his development ventures as wealthy people trying to keep the common man off the coast. "When they try to usurp the rights of people to own property in fee simple, that's a form of fascism. I expected to see them goose-stepping over at the State House," he elaborated, referring to the environmentalists.

Stevens has long been one of the major opponents to any tidelands protection legislation getting through the Senate. "Nobody uses those swamps (tidelands) for much of anything anyway," Stevens said recently. For his efforts, the League of Conservation Voters has made him virtually a permanent member of the Dirty Dozen list it publishes every two years, and has been concentrating efforts on getting him defeated.

Gasque's battle from the grave

Just when a lot of people began writing off Ralph Gasque as a political fatality, what did the fight-loving old Marion County state senator do but arise from the dead with a vigor that must have surprised the Pee Dee political pundits. After Gasque -- one of the cadre of Old Guard senators who virtually run the Senate -- lost a home rule battle last December and then was indicted by a federal grand jury in April, it appeared prayers were in order. Johnny Waller, the 38-year-old House member from Marion County, sensed his older colleague's weakness and moved in for the kill. He did something which would have been considered political suicide just months earlier: he decided to challenge Gasque for the latter's Senate seat.

Gasque, who has been Marion County's senator for all but four years since 1949, wasn't -- and isn't -- about to roll over and play dead. He has fought back against his critics and his Democratic opponent with a vengeance. There's more than one man's elective job at stake -- there's a tradition being challenged. What would the South Carolina Senate be without Gasque? The furry, arched brows. The menacing looks that have cowed his critics into silence and submission. The brusque voice barking out diatribes against bureaucrats, city-slickers, liberals, newspaper reporters, and many other pet Gasque peeves.

The first crack in Gasque's seemingly impregnable political base came last fall, when home rule was the big issue in Marion County politics. Gasque, fifth in seniority in the Senate, had used all his considerable power there to help push through the controversial Fifth Form in the home rule bill passed by the General Assembly. That would have allowed the voters the choice of letting their legislative delegation make most of the policy and administrative decisions in county government, wich was the way things had always been done in Marion County. But the voters in the December 13 referendum gave the Fifth Form (and Gasque) a resounding nay, as well as defeating at-large elections of which Gasque had also been a supporter.

Just after the home rule referendum, press reports disclosed that Gasque had been using a state-paid "administrative assistant" in his law office in Marion. Sheila Jean Huggins, a 30-year-old divorcee, had been receiving up to $14,000 a year since 1973 while technically employed by the Senate Education Committee, which Gasque chairs. But other committee members said they had never seen the woman working in the State House, and Gasque admitted she had been working out of his office -- on committee matters, he said.

Nothing much came of the Huggins matter, though. When the Senate came back into session in January, Gasque was censured, and that was about the extent of it. Then about two months later, a federal grand jury indicted Gasque for misuse of federal Manpower funds. The indictment charged that two secretaries and a yardman were paid salaries out of Manpower funds but worked in Gasque's law office in Marion. Gasque was also charged with falsifying payroll records to cover up what was going on.

Gasque will have until June 21 before he has to answer to federal court on the indictments. But he has an earlier, equally pressing engagement to meet before that -- with the voters June 8. By all rights, Waller, a well-liked Mullins lawyer, shouldn't have much trouble ousting Gasque. He's gotten considerable local exposure as half of the Marion County legislative delegation since 1966, and is also the House majority leader.

But Gasque has been able to do a lot of favors during his long tenure as de facto head of Marion County's government, and he's ready to be paid back. The legislative delegation (Gasque, in effect) has been able to appoint most county officials and award an immense number of jobs. Gasque has made his share of enemies in the process, but he's also built up tremendous political credits. The only problem is that Gasque has to run not only from Marion County but also from the other three counties in the senatorial district: Florence, Horry and Williamsburg. Gasque's considered especially vulnerable in Florence County, where a third of the district's voters reside.

So Gasque has been putting on huge media blitz in the final weeks before the primary. He has outspent Waller so far by a $20,000 to $12,000 margin, and he has outspent him on television advertising by a gap of $8,000 to $3,000. Add to that the magnetic personal appeal which the ebullient Gasque has with the "common people," and you have one hell of a candidate. The only question is whether the voters can forget about the federal indictments and the Huggins case long enough to cast their votes for Gasque. The race seems to be rated now as a toss-up. If the voters have good enough memories, though, we might see a big change in the Senate.

'Preacher' hangs in there

Waller

Harrelson

"It's looking good, it's looking real good," enthuses 34-year-old Walterboro attorney Bill Howell when asked how his campaign against veteran Senator J.P. "Preacher" Harrelson is progressing.

"We took a survey a few weeks ago and it showed me beating him 40 - 27 with the rest of the vote undecided," Howell said. "Unless things change pretty drastically in the next few days, we think we can win without a run-off."

Complicating things for Howell -- who says his campaign "is an effort to 'untrench' the entrenched and restore public confidence in government" -- is a third candidate, former Representative Clyde Ackerman, who opposed and lost to the conservative Harrelson in 1972. Should Ackerman take significant anti-Harrelson votes away from Howell, the race could end in a run-off between two of the three combatants.

Howell says he has emphasized "reform issues like ethics legislation," but that the issue that most concerns him is "the lack of reform in education and the fact that some of the school districts in the poorer counties have totally inadequate funding."

"J.P. has been going around talking up his seniority," Howell says. "But he hasn't used that seniority for constructive change. He's used it to impede progress. He has his name on the ethics legislation. But I'd be ashamed to have my name on something like the law they passed."

One of the keys in a district that includes predominantly black counties like Beaufort, Jasper, Allendale, Colleton and Hampton counties is whether Howell and Ackerman can wrest any of the Harrelson black vote away from him this time around.

"He's always gotten it (the black vote) in the past," Howell said. "But blacks are more issue-oriented now and have been real receptive to my campaign. I don't know how I'll do among the blacks, but I don't think Harrelson will get all of it this time."

Harrelson, who has been in the State House as a Representative or Senator since 1960, is apparently worried. And the campaign has become increasingly emotional, especially between him and Ackerman. "They've been doing a lot of name calling the last few days," Howell said. "But I've stayed pretty calm. I think people are ready for a change around here, and we're going to find out on June 8."

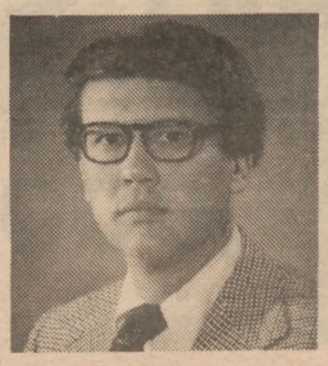
Why James W. "Chip" Cothran for County Council?



Because "Chip" Cothran knows that in the last five years Richland County Council has tripled both expenditures and personnel. As a result, property taxes and assessments have skyrocketed.

As a private citizen and attorney, "Chip" Cothran twice successfully and without compensation brought suit against County Council to hold the line.

James Cothran won't let poor management and county politics continue to increase the cost of government without improving the quality of government service. He is against any increase in property taxes. There is a fairer way to finance your county government.

funds. In the jargon of quantitative analysis, this introduces an indeterminate variable into the equation.

The Audit Council suggests that to eliminate "dual-funding," state agencies be required to return future duplicated federal reimbursements to the State General Fund, so the state legislature can keep an eye on the money. But really, the state agencies ought to be forced to go further that that, and return their present bank balances to the general fund. The Council also hints that management procedures for federal reimbursements are so poor that, "the operational integrity of the state's central accountancy system is not being maintained."

It might seem a rather straightforward proposition to enact legislation which would eliminate "dual-funding," but that's not necessarily so. The Council itself says, "it will be no easy task to correct these misconceptions" — the misconceptions being sundry excuses state agencies use to justify their "dual-funding." One of them is the mistaken idea that federal reimbursements are the same as "earned revenues" and can be treated as such by state agencies. Another is the circular argument that the use of federal reimbursements as "discretionary funds" gives state agencies the incentive to collect the reimbursements. (Only a bureaucrat could think up that one.) State agencies will also claim that the extra millions give an agency "flexibility" in management, but an agency, as spender of the public's money, has no proper right to that sort of "flexibility." And finally, the Council says the bureaucratic argument which may have the largest "confounding" impact is the one which says that "since there is no precise state statutory prescription for the proper use of the reimbursements, the management of the funds reverts by default to the agency."

Of course, none of the arguments has any validity. The issue is whether state agencies have the right to steal tax dollars and hide them away.

One can ask why the State Budget and Control Board is seemingly unaware of "dual-funding," and one might wonder if it's just the tip of the iceberg. Who knows what tales of fiscal mischief have yet to be told?

The great complaint of the political year is that we the people are fed up with big government. But perhaps our righteous indignation should rather be directed toward inefficient government. There are, you will admit, appropriate functions for government to perform. At its most benign, government must preserve the peace and collect the garbage. If one's imbued with benevolence, he'll say government ought to better the lot of the disadvantaged and do the necessary tasks that private enterprise fails to do, and even encourage desirable behavior on the part of individuals and organizations (especially corporations).

But corrupt, inefficient government, not mere big government, is the villain in this melodrama.

orderly growth and development

Richland County should grow in an orderly manner for the benefit of business, residences, farms and industries. Such growth can happen only if County Council provides leadership to represent the interests of all citizens.

To achieve such orderly growth, our county needs (1) tax assessment based on actual land use, not speculative values, (2) an assessment program which taxes all land on a fair basis and (3) solution to drainage problems for many neighborhoods in the county.

We need some new voices on county council and some responsible leadership in local government. You can make it happen.

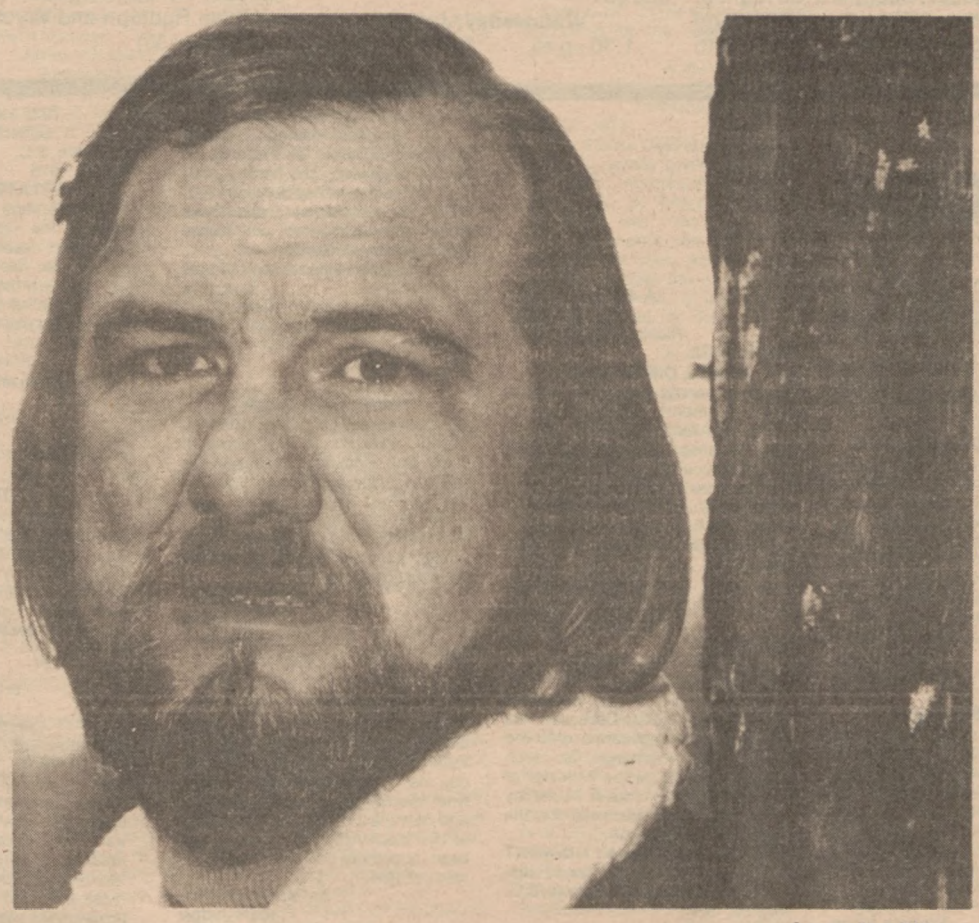
Timeclocks, poetry and Larry Jon Wilson



Larry Jon Wilson

Consider, then, the timeclocks. Come in around seven, take your little card out of the rack and start your day with a clisk and a whir, a little mechanical reaffirmation that the day has indeed begun. Eight hours later the day ends in another mechanical click and whir. Punch it; punch out; punch in; punch out; retire. Except even in the old days, hustling plastics in Miami -- consultant, the card read -- Larry Jon Wilson couldn't abide the timeclock.

Working, he didn't mind. You don't grow up poor in south Georgia by shunning your share of the work. You don't fight your way through college and finally land that good paying job with its attendant expense account and company car by being a slacker. No sir, you work. And work he did, sometives 75 and 80 hours a week, describing the joys of a new polyester resin to this fiberglass manufacturer of that yacht entrepreneur out to make their fortunes in the Sunshine State.

But the timeclock, you understand, rankled. What the middle-class businessman understood as a creature of necessity, the poet loathed as a child of the devil. Time, thought Larry Jon Wilson the poet, must surely be the exclusive province of the individual, to use or abuse as he saw fit. And try though he might, he could find no time in his life to spend stuffing a perforated card into the belly of some clock.

What Larry Jon Wilson could find time for was the coffeehouses that sprang from the roots of affluent Miami. In the evenings he shucked his corporate costume and donned the subtler costume of the street, haunting the coffeehouses to hear such new names as Gordon Lightfoot and John Sebastian, Fred Neil and Shawn Phillips. An avid spectator, he says. A lover of the music.

The scene shifts abruptly, as befitting a more modern, more hectic pace, and Larry Jon Wilson has inherited the family business, a rural mail route in North Augusta, South Carolina. He's already 33, two kids and a house in the suburbs -- as much a suburb as North Augusta, South Carolina can possibly have. The tracks are already laid, and the train of Larry Jon Wilson's life is well on its way to a predictable conclusion. Except, for the poet, time is no more the province of an Augusta suburb than a Miami timeclock. And when the time came for Larry Jon's third to be born, and the child arrived with twisted feet, Larry Jon decided it was time to sing.

There's nothing particularly surprising about becoming an entertainer -- you've even probably indulged the thought yourself. Write a few songs, get up there on stage and make a complete fool of yourself. And if you don't make a fool of yourself, maybe make a million bucks or so. A chateau in France and an invitation to Bianca Jagger's birthday party. Daydreams, you say, nice dreams. But you aren't serious, and you probably don't have a family of five to feed.

Larry Jon Wilson was and did.

"In your hometown you do little clubs," he is saying, taking a few tiny sips on a chilled glass of white wine. "And before long the audience that was there, rowdy and playing footsball and pinball, is stopped and they're listening to your words. They're listening to your stories. And it felt good to be able to do that, just playing at a local thing for beer and sandwiches and ice cream money."

His face is lined and craggy, the sort of face you'd expect on a kindly old bear. His voice, too, belongs to your imaginary bear -- a deep bass rumbling that sends little children scurrying for their mothers and ripples sliding across a glass of white wine. It's a voice that ebbs and flows around you with the slow majesty of shifting sand dunes. A blues voice. A soulful voice.

A voice, in fact, befitting his soulful music. With two well-received albums behind him, Larry Jon is the exception that proves the rule. He made it -- a recording contract with Monument Records and a writing contract with the prestigious Combine Publishing, the home of such luminaries as Kris Kristofferson and Mickey Newbury. He made it, oddly enough, by not forgetting who he was. Larry Jon's music is inextricably tied to the rural backwaters of Georgia and South Carolina, just as the black man's blues were hopelessly entangled in the cotton fields and tenant farms of the South.

Take Kristofferson, he says. Great friend. Great songwriter who can write convincingly about hard times. Even if he hasn't lived them. Now don't go getting Larry Jon wrong -- you don't have to live everything just to sing about it. But there is still the idealism of the new, if not young, songwriter. Honesty and all that.

"If I write about hard times, we had 'em. We ate fatback and hoecakes and things like that. Never felt poor. Never was the little guy. Ate like a pig 'cause there was always plenty to eat," he says. They didn't look like hard times until he got to singing about them, which tells you a lot about those times. "I wouldn't trade my upbringing for anything in the world. We're a bunch of get-together-often families. We're neck huggers, and that's good memories. You can thrive on Such, then, is the memory music of Larry JonWilson. On his first album, "New Beginnings," he sang about his son Bertrand and his dreams of seeing the boy run and play; he sang about the Ohoopee River bottomland in Georgia and how things ain't what they used to be (and probably never was). He also sang some awful things, the sort of things you might want to get on one record if you only had one record to do and were afraid you wouldn't get a second chance. In the balance, though, it was a good album, an impressive album. The second album, "Let Me Sing My Song To You," was even better, less panic material, so to speak. More artistic license; no loss of roots.

Still his music flows through the southern backwater, encompassing, for example, the sleepy ruins of the Sheldon Church in Beaufort. "Sheldon Churchyard" is a witchy song, a driving, percussion-backed excursion into an almost unknown world of root doctors and high sheriffs.

"Around that Country," is just as there would be in southern Texas and the cane country or southern Louisiana and the bayou country, there's still...I don't think they're voodoo rites as such," he says, "But there are still root doctors or people who know how to make effective medicine from herbs."

Like your grandmother, he says. Your grandmother probably knew how to do that. There's one root doctor in particular, he adds, the one in the song. Not a personal acquaintance -- but she knows. She likes Larry Jon Wilson. So he says.

It seems a long way from this club in Charlotte to Sheldon Church; an even longer way to the quiet suburbs of Augusta. But the way for Larry Jon Wilson doesn't seem nearly so far. To him, leaving a secure life behind is the simplest thing in the world, because, to him, it was never really secure anyway. And if instead of cruising central Florida in a company car or rural South Carolina in a mail truck, he was busting ass to Beaufort on a Davidson, so be it. Larry Jon Wilson is a man of passion.

Like the blues and bluesmen, whose music became an integral part of their existance which was, in turn, an integral part of the music, there's nothing transitional between Larry Jon Wilson and the stories he writes. His music, he adds, is written the only way his music can be written. It is in its own small way, unique, something that is uniquely a part of the composite person of Larry Jon Wilson. It's the old medium and message game again and it's the same old answer. You are, after all, only what you sing, and you can only sing what you are.

CINEMA

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Ebony, Ivory and Jade" is the PG offering at 3:50, 4:50, 7:30 and 9:20 p.m.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"The Erotic Dr. Jekyll" and "Infidel" combine in a can't be beat double dip beginning and showing continuously from 1:15 p.m. The last complete showing is at 9 p.m. Both are rated X.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011

Cicely Tyson and James Earl Jones are featured in "The River Niger," based on the Broadway play by the same name. Show times during the week are 1, 7 and 9 p.m. On weekends it plays at 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m. Also on Friday, June 4 and 5 at 11 p.m. "Sweet Sweetback's Badass Song" is featured at the late show.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Ode To Billy Joe." Columbia's newest theatre continues its opening with a move based on the song by Bobbie Gentry. It's rated R and shows at 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m. A special late show doubleheader on June 4 and 5 features the Beatles in "Magical Mystery Tour" and Neil Young's "Journey Through the Past" beginning at 11:15 each night.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"W.C. Fields and Me," Starring Rod Steiger and Valerie Perrine, continues. Shows for the PG-rated feature are at 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 p.m.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

Billy Joe McAllister is jumping off Tallahatchie Bridge over here, too, as "Ode To Billy Joe" goes at 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m. Rated PG.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Missouri Break." Arthur Penn's ("Bonnie and Clyde," "Little Big Man") latest release stars Jack Nicholson and Marlon Brando. It's getting mixed reactions from Columbia moviegoers. Find out for yourself at the new times of 4, 6:30, and 9:30 p.m. Rated PG.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, Cayce, 796-0022

Nicholson is all over town this week, including here in Academy Award sweeping "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." Louise Fletcher as Nurse Ratched, Director Milos Foreman and just about everyone else mopped up the awards. Showtimes are 4, 6:15 and 8:45 during the week with a 1:45 show added on Saturday and Sunday

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Shopping Center, Cayce, 796-0022

"The Story of O," soft-core stuff, continues at 3, 5, 7 and 9 during the week with a 1 p.m. show added on the weekend. Rate it X.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 254-6731

"Bad News Bears." Walter Matthau and Tatum O'Neal toss it up at 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9 each day except for Sunday, June 5 when a new film starring Gregory Peck -- "The Omen" -- previews at 8:30. No 7 or 9 o'clock show of "Bears" on Sunday.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1227 Main Street, 256-1950

"All The President's Men." As we know now they were almost all felons, and this film version shows how Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward found out. Good work from Robert Redford as Woodward, but the usual stuff from Dustin Hoffman as his partner. Walk-ons, support, and cameos by a goodly portion of Hollywood including Hal Holbrook, Jane Alexander, Jason Robards, and Martin Balsam. The dark, suitably ominous tone of the film can be credited to director Alan Pakula ("Klute," "The Parallax View") and cinematographer Gordon Willis ("Godfather II"). PG 2, 4:35, 7:10, and 9:45.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"Dynamite Women," holds forth at 3, 5, 7 and 9 on Friday, Saturday and Sunday with only 7 and 9 p.m. shows the rest of the days. Rated R.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 254-7960

Hot diggity. "Fist of Fury" and "Chinese Connection" come kicking into town on June 4, a double Kung Fu special with complete shows commencing at 1:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. Rated R.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Hawmps" shows at as yet undetermined times.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Eat My Dust" is the offering here. No times were available.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212

Jack Nicholson and Faye Dunaway star in "Chinatown." Many thought Nicholson should have copped an Oscar for his performance in this 1974 film when he was beaten by Art Carney ("Harry and Tonto"). Roman Polanski directs. Shows are at 2, 7, and 9:30 during the week and 2, 4:30, 7 and 9:30 on the weekends.

SPECIALS

Opening Sunday, June 6 at Columbia Museum of Art is an exhibition of wood engraving by S.C. artist August Cook. The print show will be on display in the Museum's Graphics Gallery through June 27. Born and raised in Philadelphia, August Cook entered the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in 1917. While there, he received the Cresson Traveling Scholarship which entitled him to summer travel in Europe. In 1924, he moved to Spartanburg, S.C. and held the position of Head of the Art Department and instructor of painting and art history at Converse College for over 42 years.

A new session of "bridging courses," designed for people who need to brush up on key college preparatory subjects before going on to post-secondary studies, will begin at the University of South Carolina June 7. Basic Mathematics I and II, Reading and Study Skills and English Grammar and Composition will be offered through the USC Division of Continuing Education, with classes meeting for a six-week period from 6 - 9 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday or Tuesday and Thursday. A maximum of two courses may be taken and interested persons should either visit the USC Division of Continuing Education in Room 4001 of the Carolina Coliseum (Blossom St. side) between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday or call 777-3808. Anyone may apply for the courses, which cost $60 each.

TELEVISION

Saturday, June 5

2 p.m. -- Baseball. The Oakland A's play the New York Yankees in the Big Apple. Joe Garagiola and Tony Kubek report the game. (Channel 10)

5 p.m. -- Wide World of Sports. It'll be a split session featuring Formula One cars racing in the Monaco Grand Prix and coverage of the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships from Philadelphia. (Channel 25)

7 p.m. -- Firing Line. Bill Buckley talks with LBJ biographer Doris Kearns on her new book concerning the late President. (Channel 35)

11:30 -- Weekend. Segments on adopted children from Asia and smuggled cocaine from Latin America are included. (Channel 6, Augusta)

11 p.m. Movie -- "Nocturne," a 1964 release starring George Raft as a detective who refuses to believe a supposed suicide is for real continues WNOK's excellent late Saturday movies series. (Channel 19)

Sunday, June 6

1:30 p.m. -- Soccer. If television ever runs out of sports to televise they'll just state making them up. In fact, they've already done that ("Anything Goes," "Superstars," etc.). This is the second or third time CBS has tried pro soccer on the viewers. Today's game is the New York Cosmos versus the Tampa Bay Rowdies. (Channel 19)

2 p.m. -- Baseball. Atlanta's pathetic Braves meet the equally pathetic Montreal Expos. This one is for shut-ins only. (Channel 10)

9 p.m. -- Masterpiece Theatre. "Notorious Woman" begins a summer series of repeats, concerning the life of George Sand, a 19th century novelist, essayist, poet and rebel.

Monday, June 7

8 p.m. -- People and Politics. This PBS series focuses this week on the California primary, to be held June 8, and the important bearing it could have on the Republican and
